IN MEMORIAM

REVOLUTION SPORTS + ENTERTAINMENT AND THE SPORTS MARKETING INDUSTRY MOURN THE LOSS OF A TRUE PROFESSIONAL

Tributes have been paid from around the world to Rod Kohler, joint Managing Director of Revolution Sports + Entertainment, an international sports PR and sponsorship agency based in London.

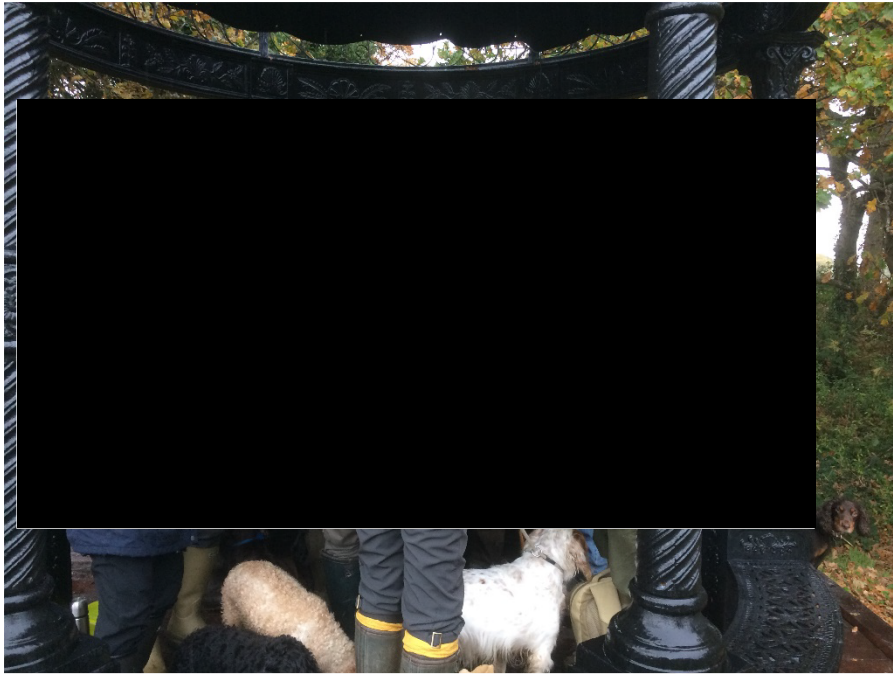

Kohler (pictured), who was 48, had been fighting pancreatic cancer and passed away last week.

A hugely popular and respected professional in the sports marketing industry, Kohler began his career over 20 years ago at the then sports agency Orbit International working on the Stella Artois sponsorship of the tennis championships at The Queen's Club. Before helping co-found Revolution Sports in 2005, he worked at international PR agency Hill & Knowlton where he was part of the communications team behind the successful Athens 2004 Olympic Bid. Whilst at H&K, he also worked on the Football World Cup in France, Formula 1 with the sponsors of three different teams and the Cricket World Cup. Kohler also worked at M&C Saatchi Sport & Entertainment working on numerous high-profile accounts including in Formula 1 and international cricket with Travelex, where he twice toured with the Australian cricket team to India.

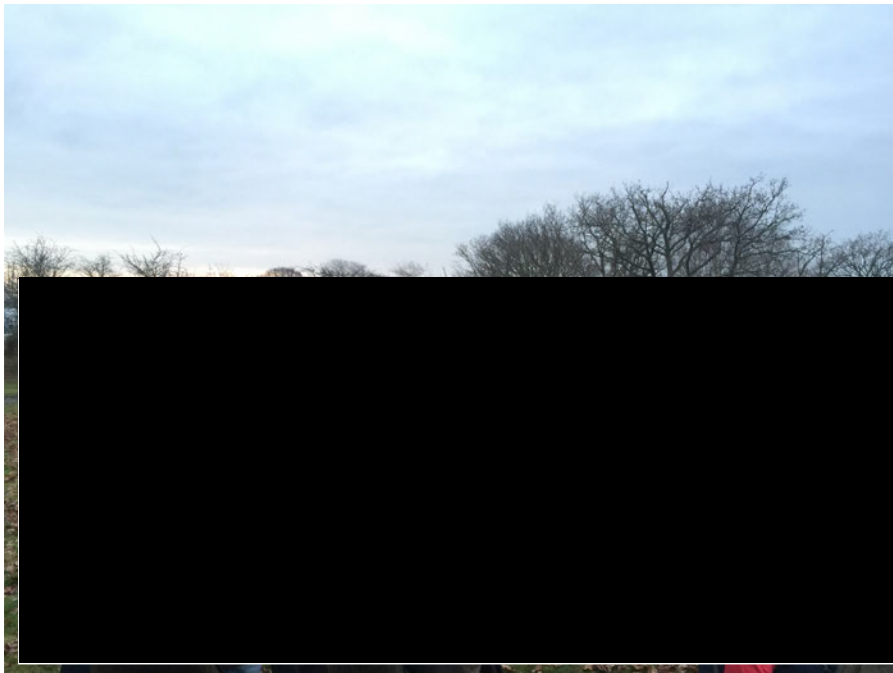

In the equestrian world, for the past 10 years Kohler has worked extensively on the biggest events around the globe, including on behalf of Rolex at five FEI World Cup Finals, two FEI European Championships, and saw the launch of the innovative Rolex Grand Slam of Show

Jumping in 2013, where he witnessed the historic first win of the global prize by GB's Scott Brash in Spruce Meadows, Calgary in 2015.

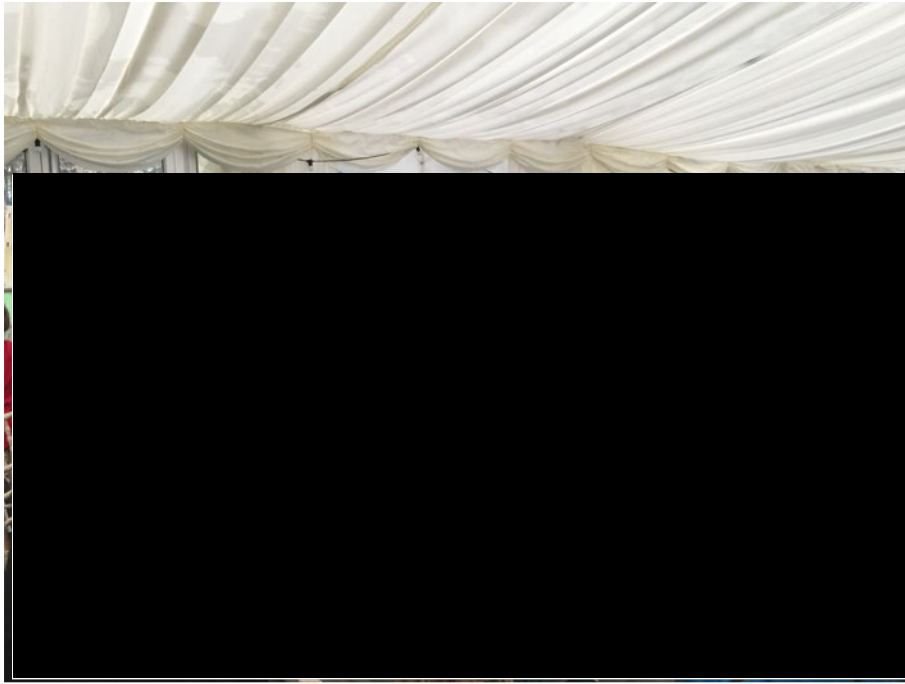

Elsewhere in the sport, amongst other accomplishments, he helped lead the launch and activation of the Furusiyya
