

And she will walk 500 miles...

■ Aim is to raise £10,000 for Naomi House and Jacksplace Hospices

This year Cally Searle will be walking 500 miles to raise vital funds for Naomi House and Jacksplace Hospices based in Sutton Scotney just outside Winchester.

This isn't her first time fund-raising for the charity, nor is it her first time taking on a challenge like this, but in 2018 she's upped her game and increased the miles she'll cover – and the amount of money she wants to raise.

Cally has worked with the fund-raising team at Naomi House and Jacksplace for eight years. She started shortly after her 30th birthday.

"There's nothing like a big birthday to help you take stock of your life," she says. "I had decided I needed a challenge in my life and friends of mine were booked to walk the Clarendon Way marathon, without hesitation I signed up too.

"There are a couple of things you need to know. I've never been a sporty person. I've struggled with my weight for years, I'm carrying about six stone more than I should and at the time of my first Clarendon Way I was a heavy smoker. I did approximately five hours training before the event, but I was determined and I've always been stubborn. I wouldn't suggest this is a good way to approach an event like a marathon and since then I've certainly learnt the importance of training beforehand."

That first year Cally completed the walk in about eight hours and was hooked. Since then she's completed the walk six more times. Cally smiles: "They put the years on the medals and I can't be missing a year!"

She's walked in blistering heat, pouring rain and everything in between. She's walked with friends, with her dog and on her own but the one thing that never changes is the amazing atmosphere. From the Naomi House staff, to the volunteers, to the members of the army who marshal the route, there is always a smile and an encouraging word. Cally says she's met wonderful people every time and has stayed in touch with some of them.

"On every walk there's a point where it hurts," she says. "Mentally it's a struggle but the one thing that gets me through is knowing when I cross that finish line, I'll collect my medal and no one will ever be able to take that achievement away from me."

This year Cally has additional reasons for taking part. After having a tour of the hospices and seeing first hand the important work the team at Naomi House and Jacksplace do every day she's become even more determined. So in 2018 she's stepped up her game and will be taking part in 10 events including the National 3 Peaks Challenge, the Clarendon Way marathon, Cornish Coast to Coast marathon and 7 ultra marathons. An ultra marathon is 100km (62miles) in 24 hours. Her target for the year is to raise £10,000 and she's fortunate to have found support from many local businesses.
