

Hi Maria.

2 foot wasn't a bad guess!

Many thanks,

Hi Maria,

I didn't measure, but did manage to get my hand down to my shoulder and don't think I was near the bottom, so at least 2 foot. I'm pretty busy over the next few days but will try to get over there with a tape measure asap.

Many thanks,

Hi Wade

I've had a look at this tree and see your concerns. When you probed the cavity did you measure how large it is? If not it would be helpful if you could and maybe take a couple of photos of a tape measure showing the depth.

Thanks

Maria

Hi Maria,

I'm not being hassled by the customer yet so don't see it should be a problem! Regards the stress fracture, it has been present for years but during storm Arwen the tree must have twisted slightly and the crack has become a lot more apparent, at a guess grew about 40%, then upon decent inspection found the cavity at the bottom.

In ideal situations I don't honestly think it's dangerous, but seeing how much the stress fracture grew in strong winds, I don't think it would hold up well if another storm came through. Also has quite high value targets if it where to fail being so close to both the road and the house.

Many thanks,

Hi Wade

Happy new year.

Unfortunately the application documents didn't get uploaded to the web so I am emailing to ask if you can agree to an extension of time to the 29th January so that we can re send neighbour notification letters. I am getting objections to lack of information so this will give people a chance to respond again now that the documents are online.

Also was the stress fracture and cavity not noticed when the latest pruning was undertaken? Or is this application based on that? I didn't deal with the previous application so not sure what happened.

Sorry about this

Maria
