

Dear sir,

as a follow on from below, how on earth is New Lane going to be able to cope with all the extra traffic that this site will produce?, we have already had enough trouble with all the house building in the area, without extra infrastructure, this again was never thought out.

The Havant area is becoming just like an area in London, just solid traffic, the town centre is becoming the same as every where else, empty shops, charity shops etc, shameful really.

I cant help feeling that Havant planning department, use these sort of developments as a box ticking exercise and dont think of the real world effects.

Sooner or later, this area will just be one giant housing complex, how sad will that be, don't planning departments realise the problem is not having enough factories or housing, its too many people on this potty little island, when will somebody put up the full sign?

I am not really sure why I am writing all this, because the council will totally ignore the residents thoughts and fears and do their own thing.
