

Daphne

i have been advised of the following in respect of the loading of vehicles:

The work vans would drive inside the warehouse facility, park, and then be loaded. Loading operations and any other activities would take place inside the warehouse. There are no intentions to have external signage of the company on the facilities. It is intended that a minimally visible presence be maintained at the site that there is actually a business at the location.

The equipment that is loaded is specialised equipment which must be treated and handled carefully. For example, it is not thrown into the vans during the loading operation. The equipment is taken off shelves, placed into wheelbarrows, and wheeled over to the van locations. Hoses and cabling are also loaded up.

i trust that this information demonstrates that the activities are very low key. It is a B8 use and no machinery [such as fork lifts] is required for the loading and unloading process - it is done by hand.
