Hi Daphney

I have pasted below the response from the operator by way of reply. I will add that I am a member of a Crossfit Gym and the arrangements outlined are in line with my own experiences.

Operators reply:-

Hi Ian,

We will be running instructor-led group strength and conditioning classes that will, at some periods during a class, involve music being played which will be strictly controlled by the instructor in terms of both when it is played, and at what volume. There is no intention to install a commercial sound system like those used in large gyms, instead, a small stereo system will be used, so the maximum volume will be well below that which would disturb any neighbouring residential areas.

In addition, general noise will be prevented from escaping the building by keeping doors and windows closed when necessary (during antisocial hours etc). Thick rubber matting will be laid on the floor of the unit to dampen the sound of any weights being dropped.

No air conditioning will be installed.

Kind Regards

Kiera

Dear Mr Power

I have recived a request for additioanl information formt he Enviroenmetnal Health officer as follows:-

I am not sure if music is played, as other types of physical activity requires. However since the use class falls within the D2, it can be envisaged that any type of gym exercise could be done there.

I would be grateful if the applicant can confirm whether they intend to play amplified music at the site.

If the intention is to have some amplified music, the applicant will need to submit a method to control the noise (amplified music, shouting screaming) from escaping the building. Also I would need details of any anticipated air conditionning, particularly in the summer months when gyms get rather hot. a noise report may be required for this. Once I have the information from the applicant in relation to amplified music/air conditioning (if any is applicable) I will formally reply. At the moment I do not have enough information to provide a proper comment.

Could I please have your response by the 14 March in order that I can progress the application.

best regards
