Sir

The proposed yellow box may be legally impossible as left-turners out of Waterloo Road may not be able to ever see that their exit (hidden behind the substation wall) is clear.

BUT this would never matter, as Waterloo Road left-turners illegally occupying box space would likely never be liable to sanction because,
FIRST there ain't now (nor are there ever likely going to ever be) any useful policing or enforcing of any such regulation hereabouts; nor
SECOND - and practically, above all - because the space they would occupy in the box wouldn't hinder entrance into Waterloo Road - much like the current arrangement.

For this reason the proposed box's extension north of Waterloo Road is pointless; the box could deliver no conceivable benefit to southbound traffic without some kind of additional traffic priority mechanism outwith even the imagination of an engineer in Halesowen.

And in turn, for the above reasons, the proposed box is pointless.

Really - what is the beef here? We are not fools.

Faithfully
