Hi Andy,

Apologies, I have been out of the office a lot recently. Our engineer has responded and advised that there is no in-principle objection to the works, however it has been advised that the lay-by appears to be of an unnatural alignment and this may need amending/revising prior to being implemented on the ground (i.e. as the scheme proceeds through the detailed design check stage), however it is acceptable for the purposes of planning.

These comments only refer to the technical layout in that I would also re-iterate the caveat of the need for the adjacent landowner to be confirmed and consent given with regards to the effective removal of access to the land to the east - which I assume is under the same landownership. We would not allow works to commence without this consent.

Kind regards

Dave
