Dear Mr Eaves

As discussed in our phone call earlier today, I would just like to submit some more information for my application regarding why it is not possible to move the end bay to the west, and have the entrance alongside the boundary.

- moving cattle in and out of the fields through an entrance next to our neighbouring boundary fence would mean having to erect a substantial brick wall of 6 to 7 feet in height (as are all corrals).
As the cattle move from one area to another they often bunch up and push against things. In these cases a domestic garden fence would not be anywhere near substantial enough to contain this situation. The necessary wall would conflict with the tpo tree, both with foundations required and the fact that the boundary is within inches of the tree.

- there would also be adverse effect on neighbouring properties due to regular tractor movement, and movement of livestock including cattle and horses. This is seven days a week and currently has no impact on neighbouring properties. Sometimes it is also at unsociable hours especially during harvest.

I would just like to reiterate that we do not wish to house cattle in these two proposed end bays, and that we would be more than happy to provide screening, in order to reduce the impact of the barn to neighbouring properties.

Regards, Graham
