Dear Mr Hollingsworth

If a proposed development would not meet the relevant permitted development criteria, I must advise that planning permission would be required. This is critical in that if a neighbour or other member of the public were to make enquiries regarding the proposed extension (i.e. during construction), the Local Planning Authority would be obligated to investigate and adhere to the relevant criteria when considering enforcement action. While some allowance is made for natural error in construction, 0.5m is too great a difference to consider under these tolerances.
