We are writing this email further our previous correspondence about the giant oak tree now largely overhanging our property.

As written previously on 16/11/16, we are experiencing the same issues but on a more concerning level.

We stated before that we were having issues with our house insurer, we were concerned as to whether they would cover us as last time the tree was an issue that we managed to overcome.

Our insurance is now up for renewal and they are questioning whether they can insure because of damage that might be caused by the tree, we have already had our house underpinned before due to the giant roots of this tree, and now the insurer is not only worried about this but they have concerns about the tree or debris damage to our property.

We have had one visit from the insurer and are awaiting another one, please can you find out as a matter of urgency who would be responsible for the damages are we unable to get our insurance renewed?

Also as pointed out previously we have the constant upkeep of guttering having to be cleaned out, and having to pick up leaves and moss through the year so we can walk on our patio without slipping over.

We have a young granddaughter that is unable to go in the back garden as we have fear if one of the large branches that fall on a regular basis, will hit her.

This large oak tree which we believe is starting to rot anyway, & the amount of branches falling, is an accident waiting to happen.

The removal of the tree does not affect anyone else in the area, so we can't understand why other people are able to object to this issue.

If it will not affect them in anyway, we are the ones struggling to use our garden properly, unable to get house insurance, scared when there's any wind something terrible might happen,

I would like for another person to have their worries, for just a week, then they would know how we feel.

If this matter could be dealt with promptly then we would be very grateful.
