

This application is intended in part to help restore Norfolk Crescent's "original" exterior design, in keeping with Listed Buildings proposals, by gradually removing previously changed windows (using metal and plastic) and replacing them with wooden windows.

Norfolk Crescent's preparatory work reportedly began in 1823, with the excavation of the under-pavement coal cellars, which stretched the full length of the proposed design. Remnants of those unused can still be seen in the grounds of Ward Court.

The actual building works began in 1825 though sadly the project was never completed.

The significant features of this Crescent unlike many of the earlier designs, Bath for example, was the inclusion of 1st floor balconies on each house and Juliet balconies on the ground floor levels of the principal buildings.
